BELGIANS INSTRUCTED
BY FRENCH OFFICERS
Break of Neutrality Forces Germany to Take Action Without Delay.
[Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch]
LONDON, August 18.—The following dispatch has been received from the wireless service which the German government sanctions:
Berlin, August 18.—The secret of Liege may be revealed.
Information reached us prior to the outbreak of the war that French officers had been sent to Liege in order to instruct the Belgian troops regarding the maintenance of the fortresses.
"No objection was made at the time, but with the outbreak of hostilities this became a break of neutrality on the part of France and Belgium, and we were obliged to take action without delay."

"Unmobilized forces were sent towards the frontier with instructions to march towards Liege, and six weak brigades on a peace footing, aided by some cavalry and artillery, captured Liege."

"Two other regiments were brought up later. Our opponents supposed that 20,000 Germans were lying in wait in front of Liege, and that they could not commence the advance, owing to the difficulty of maintaining them there."

"The delay was due to another cause. The German advance in Liege, and our opponents will realize that the army has been well maintained and well equipped for the advance."

"The Kaiser has kept his word not to let the German blood be shed on the capture of the Liege forts."

"The engagement at Muelhausen was only a casual one. One and one-half army corps belonging to the enemy were annihilated. About 100,000 troops were still being assembled, but they were driven back in the direction of Belgium, and our advance continued."

"Meantime a small fortress in the division of Strasbourg suffered defeat. The fortress was captured, and the division of Strasbourg suffered defeat. The fortress was captured, and the division of Strasbourg suffered defeat."

"The machine guns were destroyed and left behind in useless condition. They probably were captured as booty by the enemy, who proceeded towards Schirmeck."

"This success was insignificant and was entirely without influence upon our operations. However, it has served as a warning against rashness and imprudence."
